Roads unfurl, a ribboned maze, leading to known and unknown lands, some journeys ending where they began, lost in the shifting sands.
But I, Sandra, chose a different path, a road less traveled, yet profound, where compassion's light illuminates, on hallowed, healing ground.

A nurse I am, a guardian of life, where fragile hope takes flight,
I hold each precious beat and breath, a sacred trust, bathed in the morning's light.
Through shadowed valleys, I walk with those who face the final night, and in their weary eyes, I see a star, burning ever bright.

For every tear that falls like rain, a hand I offer, strong and true, a listening ear, a gentle touch, a promise whispered, "I'll see you through."
The roads may twist, the journey long, but in my heart, a flame resides, to ease the pain, to mend the soul, where healing love presides.

So let the weary life-traveler find solace in my gentle care, for in each life I touch, I find a purpose, beyond compare.
Sandra, the helper of mankind, my path is clear, my purpose known, to walk with grace, and leave behind, a love that's widely sown.
