I've known you, little one, a lifetime ago, it seems,
Though faces change, this love, a constant stream.
Your moods, a tempest, yet my heart remains,
Lingering, steadfast, through all the aches and pains.

To watch you fight, my darling, is a piercing dart,
My soul grows numb, a frozen, breaking heart.
Yet in your struggle, strength I find anew,
For with you beside me, I'll see this battle through.

This pain, this life, a force that binds us tight,
It pushes forward, with all its burning might.
I'll train my mind, to find the light within,
To ease your suffering, to help you win.

Another's joy, a bittersweet refrain,
A poignant echo of your enduring pain.
But know, my precious child, you're never alone,
My love surrounds you, making you my own.
