

Seeds of Tomorrow

By Al-Ghazier Haradji Kandon

Tawi-Tawi Regional Agricultural College, TRAC Compound, Nalil, Bongao, Tawi-Tawi, 7500,

Philippines Corresponding email: alghazierharadjikandon@gmail.com

Before the rooster calls the day,
A farmer walks the fields his way;
With dirt-stained hands and worn-out shoes,
He plants the seeds he dares to choose.

The sun may burn, the rain may fall,
Yet still he answers the field's call;
One seed, one hope, one row at a time,
He helps the earth bloom in its prime.

The soil remembers every hand,
Every sweat drop poured on land;
And every sprout that breaks the ground
Carries a promise without a sound.

So let the young ones learn and see
What growing food means to be free;
For what we plant beneath the sun
May feed the world when we are gone.

ARTICLE DETAILS

LS-0000019; Received: April 16, 2026; Accepted: April 19, 2026; Published: April 21, 2026

CITATION:

Kandon, Al-Ghazier H. (2026). Seeds of Tomorrow. Literature and Society: Stories and Poetry. DOI: 10.64591/vdk8e934

COPYRIGHT

Copyright © 2026 by author(s). Literature and Society: Stories and Poetry is published by Harness Mind Publishing. This is an Open Access article distributed under the terms of the Creative Commons Attribution License (<https://creativecommons.org/licenses/by/4.0/>), allowing redistribution and reproduction in any format or medium, provided the original work is cited or recognized.

