It starts in school, in places small,
With little steps along the hall;
A hand raised up, a voice that speaks,
A helping hand for those who seek.

It starts with choosing to take the lead,
To stand for others when there is need;
In every challenge that brings doubt,
Young leaders slowly figure it out.

A classroom may seem like an ordinary place,
Yet here, we learn to lead with grace;
Through every task and every role,
We build the courage to reach our goal.

For leadership does not start someday,
When titles and trophies come our way;
It starts right here, with what we do—
In school, where leaders become true.
