Across the sands, a heart takes flight,
A Filipina nurse, bathed in desert light.
In Jeddah's lands, a story starts to bloom –
A tale of kindness, dispelling darkest gloom.

An HIV patient, weary, worn, and frail,
Each day a tear, a heart-wrenching wail.
Regret's sharp sting, a bitter, constant pain –
A soul adrift beneath sorrow's endless rain.

He craved seclusion, refuge from the light,
To hide his anguish, shrouded in the night.
But gentle hands, with empathy imbued,
A young nurse's spirit softly interlude.

She saw beyond the sickness and despair,
A human soul, deserving tender care.
With patient grace, she soothed his aching soul –
A beacon of hope making broken hearts whole.

She spoke of strength, of courage, and of grace,
A smile, a touch upon his suffering face.
She held his hand and whispered words of peace –
A gentle solace that would never cease.

Though tantrums raged and darkness filled the air,

Her heart stayed firm, her love beyond compare.
Compassion's flame kept burning ever bright,
Guiding him gently toward the healing light.

And as the days turned into weeks, then more,
A transformation bloomed not seen before.
The tears subsided; quiet strength arose –
A grateful heart where bitter sorrow goes.

So let this poem, a testament, proclaim
The power of compassion's gentle flame.
A Filipina nurse, brave, strong, and true –
Whose care and love brought hope anew.
